Robert G. McSwain,
Acting Director
Indian Health Service
801 Thompson Avenue
Rockville, Maryland 20852

September 14, 2015

Dear Acting Director McSwain:

In April 2014, the Indian Health Service released the results of 2010 Oral Health Survey of American Indian and Alaska Native Preschool Children. One of the key findings of the report was that these children suffer from disproportionately high levels of Early Childhood Caries (ECC)—levels which are almost four times higher than among Hispanic or White populations. In our own States of Arizona and New Mexico, ECC rates are among the highest in the Nation. The 2014 Report also contained a number of recommendations, suggesting that:

1. Age specific prevention programs be developed to reduce the burden of dental disease;
2. Increase the number of dental providers available to provide care to this population;
3. Develop strategies to address the backlog of dental disease;
4. Partner with non-dental health care providers to assess, educate and refer children in need of dental care; and
5. Collaborate with health care administrators, Chief Executive Officers, Area Directors and Tribal Administrators to ensure adequate support for both preventive and restorative dental problems.

Just a few months ago, the Indian Health Service issued an additional Data Brief reporting on the results of a 2014 IHS oral health survey among children aged 1-5 years, which once again demonstrated that tooth decay is still a significant health problem in this population. However, unlike the full survey from 2010, the Data Brief does not break down the data by IHS Area, despite the fact that service units in our states participated in the survey. Therefore it is difficult to determine if any progress has been made since 2010.

Awareness of these vast oral health disparities has increased significantly among the American Indian communities in our states, as has the importance of robust prevention activities. In fact, in many American Indian communities, oral health issues dominate the healthcare conversation and organized efforts are developing to increase oral health literacy, change nutrition habits, and focus prevention efforts on younger children and their parents and caregivers. These community efforts need the support of the Indian Health Service. The data generated by these studies can help build greater understanding of the problem and disaggregation of the IHS data will help to focus prevention efforts where the problems are the most serious. However, despite the stated objective noted in Recommendation #5 above, there does not appear to be an organized effort on the part of the Indian Health Service to share and interpret this data with Tribal officials.

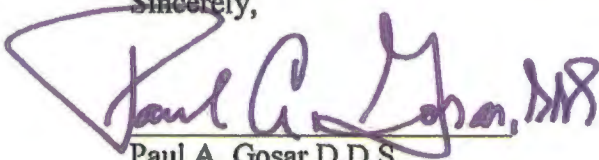

The undersigned members of the Arizona and New Mexico Congressional delegations respectfully request the answers to the following questions:

1. The 2014 Report contained the results of a 2010 survey. What caused a four year delay in the release of this data?
2. How were the results of the 2014 Report shared with the tribal community?
3. The 2014 Report contained results on an area-by-area basis. What does the 2015 data show on an area-by-area basis and how does this compare to the 2010 survey results?
4. How is the IHS supporting prevention efforts in the Phoenix, Albuquerque, Navajo and Tucson areas?
5. How does the data compare to data collected in 2010? Is IHS making any progress?
6. What is your plan to share the recent data and support prevention and education activities on the tribal level?
7. How can additional efforts be leveraged to address the problem?

In the interest of gaining a better understanding of these complex issues, we are requesting that the IHS conduct a briefing session so that we as Members of Congress and our staff may be better informed of your plans and more effectively report back to the tribal communities in our States and Districts.

Your assistance in this matter is appreciated. We look forward to your timely response.
